

SICK 4 YEARS; WELL IN 3 WEEKS

After Taking BAUGHN'S PELLAGRA TREATMENT.

This Woman Wanted Death To End Her Suffering. Happy Now She's Cured.

Garnsey, Ala.—Mrs. Bama Jacobs, of this place, writes: "I was a constant sufferer from that dreadful pellagra for four long years. My case seemed beyond my doctor's reach and in July, 1918, he said he could do no more for me. I would even find myself praying to die, I suffered so much. Finally my husband ordered a trial of Baughn's Pellagra Treatment and in three weeks I could see a great change and I am well today. I say to all, Take Baughn's Treatment and be cured, for my case was bad, and of long standing."

This testimonial says more than we could say, except this: We can cure pellagra and will undertake to cure any case, no matter of how long standing, on basis of refunding the money if we fail to effect a cure. If you suffer from such symptoms as red hands, skin peeling off, sore mouth, inflamed lips, throat and tongue; indigestion and nausea, diarrhoea or constipation, get today Baughn's big booklet on pellagra, sent free. ## YOUTHS WON'T DO ACTUAL FIGHTING

Though Administration Will Ask Age Limit Be Lowered, Men Under 21 Will Not Go Over.

WILL UNDERGO TRAINING

Interpreted That Is First Step Toward Compulsory Military Training.

Washington, July 26.—While the administration will ask when congress reconvenes that the draft age be lowered, members of the military affairs committee of both houses were allowed to understand today that present plans do not contemplate the use of men in actual fighting until they have reached the age of 21. In the meantime the men would undergo vigorous training in this country.

This was universally interpreted, even by opponents, as a direct step toward universal military training. It would, in fact, be universal training for the period of the war. Committee members believed, however, that before the new policy had been in effect six months the administration would back a move to make it permanent.

In order that the government may have a free hand in dealing with any situation that shall arise, it may be that no provision will be contained in Secretary Baker's new man-power bill that would prevent sending men under 21 to the trenches, members of the senate committee pointed out.

However, if the demand for such a provision grew to large proportions, it was indicated that the administration would accept amendments from the floor to this end, and, indeed, might sponsor such amendments.

This would remove a great deal of the opposition that now exists in setting of the draft age as low as 19. In the present situation 20 years would be very much more acceptable to congress as the lower limit. The fact that the issue of universal military training is involved, is not expected to arouse any considerable opposition.

Congress is rapidly being converted to the system, although it is not yet ready to accept it as a permanent policy.

Agitation in congress for measures to prevent strikes in essential industries during the war led to a dozen conferences at the war department today. Under the new man-power bill, when it becomes a law, the government would have power to compel all strikers between the ages set to return to work under a threat of induction into the military service. Influences are at work seeking to have the government exercise this power under an elaboration of the recent

"work or fight" order. Secretary Baker, however, is understood to have taken a firm stand against this form of coercion, and in this he has the backing of the president. Circumstances may, nevertheless, induce the secretary to change his mind on the subject at a later date.

The whole labor question is one to which much attention is being given by officials at this time. While speeches in the senate urging conscription of labor or the fixing of a maximum wage are not taken seriously at this time, the danger that they may have to be at some not far distant time is fully recognized.

Officials seeking the cause of strikes in munitions plants and other essential industries, find it in the constantly rising cost of living and the inclination of employers to pay less attention to conditions of labor. Liberals among President Wilson's advisers believe strikes can in a large measure be prevented by regulating the cost of living rather than salaries, and that if conscription of labor is to be resorted to, it should be preceded by the taking over of every industry for which labor is to be conscripted.

OUR BOYS SPURRED TO VENGEANCE BY FOE'S ACTS

Finding Bodies of Comrades Hanging to Trees, They Fight With Renewed Courage.

(By William Cook)
(Copyright, 1918, The New York World)

Paris—As the battle news reaches Paris the smile on the faces of the inhabitants becomes bigger and lasts longer. American soldiers in Paris are the center of admiration on the boulevards, every one wanting to congratulate them on the success of their comrades fighting on the Marne. Poilus on leave in Paris go up to the big American boys and heartily shake their hands.

Late yesterday afternoon auto ambulances driven by French soldiers filed down the Avenue de l'Opera conveying American wounded to one of the big French hospitals—the center of the city. The men, looking out of the ambulances, were soon recognized as Americans by the French promenaders, who cheered them again and again. The American boys acknowledged the French enthusiasm, some waving their hands, others with arms bandaged, smiling and shaking their heads.

Yet War is So Near Little more than fifty miles from smiling Paris the battle continues, the allied troops breaking up fierce counter attacks launched by Ludendorff between the Ourcq and Marne. Using fresh reserves, Ludendorff decided to attempt to hold the allies' furious drive toward the east and north, but these counterblows failed just as did the large scale offensive on June 15.

An eyewitness brings back a fine impression of the fighting qualities of the American troops in the French left. "They fight like lions," he says. "Today these men have the spirit of vengeance as well as natural bravery, for in the course of their first counter attack they came across the bodies of some of their chums who had been hanged by the Germans to trees in the forests. No mercy is now shown to any of the Kaiser's soldiers when they are caught in any such underhand work. The American troops never wanted any encouragement, their bravery sufficed; but that, added to the desire to avenge their comrades not killed in ordinary battle but murdered, has given them a fiercer courage. A little further up the battle line French troops had succeeded in driving the enemy from half of a hillside village. On the side held by the pollus German high explosives continually burst. Not far away were two telephone round which French officers gathered taking down messages. On the left our assaulting waves are progressing; the commander of the battalion has been wounded, but a captain has taken charge and is advancing. Our sharpshooters have taken the wood; some are bringing prisoners back. These are some of the messages which came through. When communicated to the Colonel, he replied: 'Fine, I believe by tonight we will be able to have our headquarters at—'

This happens not only in one particular part of the line, but all along it. The telephone officers are being pushed forward every day. The commanders do not lose sight of their men; they are in constant touch with them. The eyewitnesses met some poilus going up to the line. These men had just returned and they swung past with smiles on their bronzed faces.

PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT
